

I want to urge the FCC to not force the FM translators off the air because my family and I would lose our ability to listen to K-LOVE 106.7, which is the only all-music Christian radio station we can receive at home. My husband and I donate $40 dollars every month to this public-supported, commercial-free radio station because we value it so much. This is much more than we contribute to the local classical music station even though we both enjoy that station as well. K-LOVE is a nation-wide station that plays uplifting, commercial-free music, which is very valuable to us as parents of a toddler and a preschooler. Almost every other radio station available to us does not filter information, ideas and concepts that we believe are inappropriate for our children, in their news, music, or commercials. Hundreds of thousands of Christians like us value tremendously this unique niche provided by K-LOVE, particularly given the lower standards for public decency that are now the norm in the media. Also, I am routinely reminded to praise God in all circumstances because I listen to K-LOVE. Even non-Christians can benefit from the encouraging, positive, commercial-free radio station. It behooves the federal government to protect this novel form of media in an age where different or unusual worldviews receive less attention (and acceptance) from the mainstream media--that is increasingly of one flavor.

Thank you for considering my position.
